

For immediate release

24 November 2013

Rory McIlroy and Oakley Resolve their Differences

The legal claims brought by Oakley against Rory McIlroy in California have been amicably settled to the satisfaction of both parties.

Pat McIlvain, VP of Oakley Sports Marketing, said on behalf of the Company: "We are very pleased the proceedings against Rory have been resolved. We enjoyed an excellent relationship with Rory as an Oakley brand ambassador. He conducted all his engagements on our behalf with energy and professionalism. We recognize that, in his business dealings with us that were the subject matter of this dispute, Rory was represented by his agent."

McIlroy also expressed satisfaction that the case against him is resolved.

"I always had an excellent working relationship with Oakley's representatives and I am delighted the case is now behind me."

Ends

For further information, please contact:

Catherine Burke, The Communications Clinic, Tel: 00 353 (0)87 412 9371